Commentary

During the month of January, the rand weakened by 4% against the US dollar, leading the platinum group metals to new rand-denominated highs. This, together with very positive trading updates by a number of the platinum mining companies, served as a catalyst to boost the share prices of the Fund's platinum miners. Unfortunately, the same cannot be said for the gold companies — while the rand gold price is similarly approaching new highs, their stocks are deeply out of favour and are languishing well below their highs for various reasons. For example, the most likely reason why Harmony Gold is out of favour is the market's disappointment at the company's inability to control costs in recent quarters. While we share in this disappointment, the company is profitable at the current rand gold price and we look forward to its profit margins improving as the company transitions to higher grade deposits over the next few years.
