Commentary

South African shares and the Africa Fund sit near historic highs when measured in rand. However, since the end of October, they are down more than 20% and almost 30% when measured in US dollars and euro respectively. Despite this considerable rand weakening, structural imbalances in South Africa lead us to believe that the risk is toward further rand weakness. Your Fund is positioned to benefit from this through its holdings in South African exporters, mainly mining companies, and from companies which meet domestic demand, with domestic production, at import prices. Also, some of the larger positions, such as MTN, SABMiller, Remgro, and Richemont, earn substantial portions of their profits outside South Africa and thus provide some protection against a weakening rand. Although we see further rand weaknesses as justified, currency movements can be volatile and counter to fundamentals for extended periods, with resultant adverse effects on the Fund as it is currently positioned.
