Commentary

While the Fund returned good absolute returns for the last 12 months, it underperformed its benchmark and the average general equity fund over the last year. This was mainly as a result of the Fund's higher exposure to selected South African focused resource shares which were hurt by the strong Rand. Our investment philosophy has always been based on seeking out investments that we believe will provide superior long-term returns. We are also quite willing to have portfolios that are different to that of the average manager. Three years ago when the Rand/dollar exchange rate was R12/dollar, we were overweight resources relative to the average manager at a time when general consensus was that the Rand would stay weak and even weaken further. Based on our bottom-up analysis, the Fund benefited significantly from its low exposure to resources and high exposure to specific industrials as the Rand returned to more normal levels. With the 31 March 2005 rate of R6.23/dollar, we notice that we are overweight resources and underweight industrials at a time when there is general consensus that the Rand will stay strong and even get stronger. We believe that the Rand is now too strong and that the Fund's resource holdings offer very attractive returns on a normalised basis. The Fund also remains overweight banking shares, which we find more attractive than many of the industrial shares which are now trading on reasonably high multiples on high earnings.
