Commentary

Over the past few months, the Fund has been increasing its holdings in high quality, growing businesses that we believe are under-priced, at least relative to the benchmark. One such example is SABMiller, the world's second largest brewer by volume. Over the past three years, SABMiller has grown revenue and operating income at an average rate of 8% and 13%, respectively. These growth rates are well above industry average and a testament to the excellent management team, who has positioned the group in faster growing emerging markets and leveraged the group's global brands through higher margin premium products. SABMiller's share price is not incredibly cheap, as reflected in its valuation of around 19 times March 2008 earnings. However we think the company will continue to grow earnings at an attractive real rate for the foreseeable future, in contrast to the many cyclical companies in the benchmark whose earnings we believe to be unsustainably high.
