Commentary

In 2014, two of our favourite shares have moved in opposite directions. We discussed INPEX in June last year, and since then it has outperformed the Japanese market by over 20%. Our thesis remains the same: we continue to believe the Ichthys natural gas project will greatly increase INPEX's longterm earnings potential. Progress for Ichthys remains on budget and on schedule, and following a long period of underperformance for INPEX, it seems the market is beginning to appreciate the project's value. We retain a positive long-term view on the stock. On the other end of the spectrum is SEGA SAMMY HOLDINGS, which we discussed last September. Disappointed by slow progress on casino legislation and weak results due to a delayed product launch, the market has punished the stock. Taking a longer-term view, we believe these issues will prove temporary and that the potential for SEGA SAMMY to participate in a Tokyo casino is more valuable than the market appreciates. Of course, while we do consider shortterm price movements for the opportunities they might expose, our focus is always on the longer-term performance we can deliver for your Fund.
