PORTFOLIO

Commentary

The Chinese economy has become overly dependent upon massive fixed investment spending, both public and private, which some observers believe has created the biggest property bubble of all time. Your Fund, which is over 50% invested in China, has little direct exposure to those sectors, such as banking, which we view as most vulnerable to a correction in fixed asset investment. Your Fund's Chinese stocks are overwhelmingly in consumer-oriented sectors where we believe companies with a substantial competitive advantage can grow revenues and earnings meaningfully over our investment horizon. A clear and smooth transition towards a consumer-based economy would be welcome, but is not a critical part of our thesis. Over time we believe our approach of picking attractive stocks on a bottom-up basis, while being mindful of the big picture, can produce pleasing long-term returns for clients regardless of the short-term prospects for the Chinese economy.
