Commentary

If you enjoy cocoa, coffee or cashews, you are likely to have consumed some of Olam International's products. Your Fund's third biggest holding, Olam is one of the world's largest traders of agricultural commodities. The company has carved itself a solid franchise by building leading market shares in niche products, where competition is lower, and by its farm-gate sourcing model, which enables value-added services like traceability and organic certification. This unique business model, combined with high quality risk management, enables Olam to successfully generate a high return on equity from a traditionally low-margin business. The market, however, does not share our positive view on its long-term earnings potential: the stock trades at just 1.6 times tangible net asset value, its lowest level since the company's 2005 listing and well below our assessment of its intrinsic value. We believe that Olam will bear fruit for your Fund should its valuation recover from current depressed levels.
