PORTFOLIO

Commentary

For the first time since inception, your Fund has begun to hedge part of the currency exposure of its Korean equities. While our bottom-up analysis has uncovered a number of attractively-valued equities in Korea—which currently comprise 40% of the Fund—our enthusiasm does not extend to the currency. At current exchange rates, we believe there is a risk that the won may turn out to be a poor store of purchasing power, which is our primary concern when managing the Fund's currency exposure. In particular, the won may suffer if Korean policymakers take steps to make the currency more competitive with others in the region such as the Japanese yen. As a result, we have taken advantage of your Fund's capacity to hedge its currency exposure, allowing the Fund to be exposed to attractively-valued Korean equities while avoiding the uncompensated risk that we see in the won.
