PORTFOLIO

Commentary

Weak sentiment across the Korean stockmarket in recent years has caused your Fund’s holdings in the brokerage sector—which include Kiwoom Securities, Korea Investment Holdings, and Samsung Securities—to trade below our assessment of their intrinsic value. More recently, lower interest rates and government efforts to boost capital markets have driven stronger retail investment activity, which naturally benefits the country’s brokers. They also stand to gain from greater industry deregulation, such as the expected legalisation of online account opening, and the changing appetite of Korean investors, who are turning their attention from property investments to stocks. While shares of Korean brokers have significantly outperformed the benchmark year to date, we have largely maintained the Fund’s positions in them, as we remain optimistic about their ability to deliver attractive risk-adjusted returns over the long term. As always, our focus is not on short-term results, but rather on ensuring that your Fund is positioned in the most attractive shares we can find.
