Commentary

Last week, the Korean government gave investors a nice gift—a slate of measures designed to spur companies to pay higher dividends. Dividends had been taxed at the highest income tax rate, discouraging companies from paying out earnings and encouraging investors to look elsewhere for income. After the change, dividends will be taxed more lightly and at a much lower rate than interest income, making a dividend yield of 1.6% as valuable after tax as the 2.5% interest currently available on bank deposits. This change has triggered a strong rally in Korean shares with substantial dividend-paying potential, including your Fund's holdings SK Telecom, KB Financial, and Korea Electric Power. Not all of these companies have paid high dividends in the past, but consistent with our long-term perspective, we focus not just on a company's past payouts, but also on its future payout potential. It is encouraging to see this approach be rewarded.
