PORTFOLIO

Commentary

In August, the Japanese yen hit a 15-year high against the US dollar. We have been fortunate that your Fund's recent focus on domestic stocks, rather than exporters, has helped contain the damage. On the other hand, our stock selection in Japanese financial shares has significantly detracted from your Fund's performance. While this is disappointing, we continue to find Japan's broader valuation picture encouraging. Valuations across the Japanese stockmarket as a whole are undemanding, and your Fund's holdings are especially attractive by most measures of value. For those Members who may be concerned about yen exposure at current levels, we note that our Japan strategy is also accessible through similar investment vehicles that are not only denominated in US dollars or euro, but are also hedged into those currencies.
