Commentary

Many investors are bearish on domestically-oriented Japanese shares, but your Fund retains its preference for these companies. That is not to say we are necessarily more bullish about the local economy than anyone else. Rather, our fundamental research has simply uncovered a number of attractively priced, well-run Japanese companies with a domestic focus that have a proven ability to grow even in tough times. Rakuten is a good example. Essentially an online shopping mall, Rakuten's revenue has grown at a 17% annualised rate over the past three years as Japan's e-commerce market has continued to develop. We believe Rakuten's operating margins are sustainable and it is encouraging that the company has not needed to issue additional shares to finance its growth. At only a modest valuation premium to the Japanese market, Rakuten's current share price does not reflect our assessment of the intrinsic value of the business and its long-term growth potential.
